Friday, December 3, 2004
Augusta Civic Center
9:00 - 3:00

“Sowing the Seeds Of Information Literacy”

This program will introduce the concept of “information literacy” and to the ways in which a library can contribute to the development of an information literate library user and an information literate community. Guided by their own experience and by discussion of current research and practice, participants will identify a number of reasons why information literacy is a “survival skill” for library users in the 21st Century. Participants will leave this workshop familiar with a variety of ways information literacy may be incorporated into their daily work and armed with a number of resources useful both for their own continuing education and for the development of their own information literacy programming.

Target audience: Directors and staff from all types of libraries.
